

An Ode to our English faculty

In the halls of learning, Where words abound,
The teachers of English Literature can always be found.
With their books and their pens and their passion for verse,
They guide us through stories that can make our hearts burst.
They help us dissect Shakespeare and his sonnets so true,
And unlock the mysteries of Dickinson and Poe too.
They introduce us to Austen and Bronte and Woolf,
And show us the beauty of language with proof.
Their knowledge is vast, and their enthusiasm so grand,
Their love for the written word we can barely understand.
But we feel it in their every sentence and every phrase,
And in the way they inspire us with their words and their ways.
So let us thank these teachers of English Literature,
For opening our minds to a world that's so pure.
For showing us the power of language and rhyme,
And for inspiring us to create stories of our own in time.
