In the classroom of life, where knowledge is sought,
English Literature students can be easily caught.
Their minds are open, their hearts are wide,
As they delve into stories with great pride.
Their peers in other subjects may scoff and tease,
But these students know the value of their degrees.
They understand the power of words and their worth,
And the beauty that lies in the stories they unearth.
While others may focus on numbers and facts,
English Literature students see beyond these acts.
They know that a story can change the world,
And they're not afraid to let their imaginations unfurl.
They analyze the language and study the prose,
And find meaning in every line that flows.
They explore the characters and the themes they bring,
And discover a new understanding of everything.
So here's to the students of English Literature,
Who seek knowledge and meaning with every picture.
They may not always fit the traditional mold,
But they have a story to tell that's worth its weight in gold.
